Improving the understanding of migration-related issues in the Caribbean region is crucial for the development of evidence-based policies and projects. This course aims to inform governments and other national or international stakeholders, by providing a conceptual background on migration governance, and examining the main migration trends as well as the status of migration management capacities in the Caribbean. The information included in the course is based on the “Migration Governance in the Caribbean: Report on the Island States of the Commonwealth Caribbean”, published by IOM in 2018.

CONTENTS:

Module I:

Migration Governance: Overview

Global background on migration governance; Migration Governance Framework (MiGOF): objectives and principles.

Module II:

Migration Trends in the Caribbean

Migration trends; key actors in migration governance; partnerships and regional integration benefits.

Module III:

Migration Governance in the Caribbean

Good practices and standards on migration governance; border management and security; preparation for emergencies and natural disasters; counter-trafficking; migrants' access to health services; labour migration and human development.

The objective of this course is to improve the understanding of what constitutes migration governance and to provide an overview of the main migration trends in the Caribbean region. This course also explores the status of migration governance in the Caribbean through a review of the actions being undertaken by the States to implement well-managed migration policies.
