Results of information collection El Progreso, Honduras.

Communication for Development (C4D) is a participative process in which communication tools and activities are used to support social and behavioral change in a sustained manner. C4D allows to understand the position of a specific audience towards any issue, involve them in every step of the process and develop messages, tools and activities accordingly.

The first step in this methodology is to know deeply the communities where the strategy is being implemented.

Therefore IOM, along with local partners, has developed a study of various communities in Honduras, with the goal of understanding the knowledge, attitudes and practices of people towards migration issues. This study is a baseline on which the campaign for El Progreso will be built, simultaneously with the one already in development in San Pedro Sula.

METHODOLOGY

Target audience

People aged between 14 and 18, who have decided to migrate in the upcoming 12 months, or who want to do it, even though they don't have short-term plans. 49,1% men, 50,9% women.

Coverage¹

• Treatment area

El Progreso (253 surveys)

• Control area

Tegucigalpa (247 surveys)

Survey method

Surveys were applied by local volunteers (from the office of the Mayor of El Progreso and Young People Against Violence), who were trained by IOM about the administration of the questionnaire. Interviewees were selected through random sampling, in coordination with nine schools in El Progreso and Tegucigalpa.

Data collection

6 to 21 February, 2020

Sample size

500 people

Collection method

Face-to-face interview assisted by tablets.

¹ The treatment area comprises the main community where we intend to work, while the control area is a baseline for comparison at the time of evaluating results. In this community we are not to work directly, as it would alter the measuring of results.
